The Forest Service is considering its first fee for hiking and camping near 14ers. Under the plan, the Forest Service would charge $10 per person for hiking and $20 to camp in the heavily used South Colony Basin in the Sangre de Cristo Mountains, according to the Colorado Springs Gazette newspaper.

Hikers can access four 14ers from the South Colony Basin: Humboldt Peak, Crestone Peak, Crestone Needle and Kit Carson Peak.

The newspaper reported up to 4,500 people visit annually in an area with no restrooms.

There is no fee to climb any 14er in Colorado, except the privately owned Culebra Peak. The owners there charge a $100 fee, according to 14ers.org. There is a fee to drive to the top of Mount Evans and Pikes Peak.

There are no plans to require reservations and limit the number of permits, said Mike Smith, San Isabel National Forest Forester.

The Forest Service is taking public comment on the proposal through the summer. To comment, click here.

7NEWS photographer Major King climbs 14ers. See the video of his family's adventure on Humboldt Peak and the Crestone Needle here. And see the 7NEWS story of them climbing Culebra Peak.